Classic sport 12mm fold' n store table tennis

Critical ReviewAlge reviews of Christopher P. Cabuzzi3.0's 5-starGood table, but not holding on its own when folded. Revised in the United States on January 17, 2016While this chart is miles ahead of the last table we had, it's not as impressive as I thought it would be. The main problem is with storage, which was #1 reason why we bought it. Pros: Deployed, it's a big table, which comes with a big net. There is some carelessness where the factory assembly, but nothing that really affects the game. Because each side bends in the middle, there is a barely noticeable gap. If the ping-pong ball gets to that point, it may not bounce the way you expected... but it also adds an element to the game. We're not serious players. Cons:My biggest complaint with the table is that when they bend, the sides don't stop on their own. It's very frustrating. As long as you have a grip on the handles, it rolls up easily, but since there are only two wheels, as soon as you release it, it will fall off. You have to put him to bed. There is no way to store them vertically... at least without getting to anything to keep the tables connected. If maybe he had come with a bag that slid on both sides and left a hole for the handles, it could have worked with only two wheels per side... I am also disappointed that there are no fasteners to connect where the two sides are touched to make a full table. The net sits right over the gap, and helps rinse the sides a little bit, but it's quite noticeable. The net is also not strong enough to remain taught without bowing. The net is very nice, since it is self-wheeled, but that the spring pressure makes the poles want to lean towards the center. Note: For those with sagging problems: Originally there was some sagging in the middle, but there is a third bar that you have to disconnect from your shipping position, which connects each of the two pairs of keys to each other. If it's useful, I can take a picture, but basically after connecting that, the table is flat. Model No: 1-1-33610, 1-1-33610-DS Touch and hold to zoom.
